

Associate Professor, Social and Political Philosophy

Beginning Fall 2010. Ph.D. required. Four courses/year, beginning undergraduate to graduate level. Usual advising, committee, and other non-teaching duties, with some department-level administrative experience preferred. AOS: Social and Political Philosophy, with a focus on democratic theory and relations between political theory and political practice/public life. Candidates should have a demonstrated ability to work in, and across, multiple philosophical traditions, and to connect that work to other disciplines. AOC: 19th and 20th century philosophy, especially in feminist theory and/or ethics, in ways that deepen and expand departmental research and teaching strengths.

Review of applications begins November 15, 2009; finalists will have campus visits arranged beginning in January. Applications must include: a cover letter that addresses the position description; a current CV; and, the names and contact information of three potential referees (who will be contacted only after consultation with the applicant). Send applications to: Political Philosophy Search, Department of Philosophy, 214 Bowden Hall, 561, South Kilgo Circle, Emory University, Atlanta, GA 30322. Nominations are invited. Emory University is an Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action Employer, and actively seeks applications from women and minorities.
